Antioxidant effects of angiotensin II on vascular wall. There is growing evidence that oxidation of the vascular wall may play a major role in the pathogenesis of atherosclerosis and hypertension. In fact, in the presence of hypercholesterolemia, oxidized low-density lipoprotein can be taken up by macrophages and can induce lipid accumulation and foam cell formation, and it can also stimulate vascular smooth muscle cell proliferation. Angiotensin II can enhance the oxidative stress in vascular tissues by enhancing the production of reactive oxygen species, which leads to cell growth and the induction of vascular remodeling in hypertension. On the other hand, angiotensin II can also produce a large amount of nitric oxide. In addition, it has been reported that angiotensin II can enhance the antioxidative activity in vascular tissues. These vascular effects of angiotensin II may also be related to the increase in cyclic GMP levels and the phosphorylation of the second messenger protein. In addition, angiotensin II can also enhance the antioxidative

Parse.com Server-side data vs Cloud code I am working on a project which is built on Parse.com as back-end. I have a different architecture for front-end.
It means I have to use a separate database. (I am using MongoDB). Now

the question is: If I want to use cloud code to access server-side Parse.com data or should I use just the normal "fetch" method? If I use cloud code, how do I set the property of the Parse object before saving it to the database? A: If you want to make use of cloud code, use it. The cloud code is not a replacement for server-side code, but it can
