More info on the product website. A: What's wrong with the Windows 7 beta driver?

That's as close as we can get to you will have to call them. They probably won't. He's right, I tried the install. It says the device is not installed correctly, I installed it again and it says the same thing. What the heck is going on? The reboot or shutdown problem has been in Windows 7 Beta. A: I'm pretty sure that your card is from a previous generation.

The ATI 5000 series cards were released in September 2008 (R300), and they are now retired. On your card, if it's not an "integrated" card, you should be able to find the model number (which is usually on the back, and usually looks like this (but can look like this instead):

If you can't find the model number, you can search Google to see if there's a forum for your specific card. That said, you should try the latest beta of Windows 7. I believe there are some video card issues with this release of Windows 7, but I haven't heard any particular issues with ATI graphics cards.
