french kiwi satellite operator Eutelsat has launched a complaint to the World Space Observatory (WSO) against Inmarsat, the U.K.-based owner of the S band, for using its frequencies for mobile phone voice services . Inmarsat owns the U.K.'s airwaves for. Eutelsat has lodged a complaint to the World Space Observatory with the World Administrative Radio Conference. Having owned the British L band for two decades, Inmarsat is in the process of moving its GSM services from the British L band to the British C and S bands. This will allow the company to raise its voice services allowance. The World Administrative Radio Conference — the body of the UN that is set up to manage the ITU's spectrum — hopes to resolve the issue before the IMTS. This is because the ITU award the International Telecommunication Union spectrum licenses directly to satellite owners in the U.K. and. Satellite operator Eutelsat has lodged a complaint to the World Space Observatory with the World Administrative Radio Conference, which is due to meet in December. Satellite operator Eutelsat is filing a complaint with the World Administrative Radio Conference to prevent Inmarsat from using its radio spectrum for mobile voice services. Ms. Tierce N For 15 years, beginning in 1995, Inmarsat owns the U.K.'s radio spectrum at 8.27 GHz. The question of whether this can be used for mobile voice services has been pending since 2000. Inmarsat did not tell the European Telecommunications Standards Institute when it applied to cover the 8.27 GHz spectrum. The Eutelsat complaint to the World Administrative Radio Conference follows a complaint from French satellite operator Eutelsat to the European Commission. Inmarsat plans to start covering the British C and S bands, which are reserved for amateur radio, in April. Inmarsat had reserved the U.K.'s L band for mobile phone voice services until 2015, when the company received permission to raise its voice services allowance from. Inmarsat has started applying for the use of the British C and S bands for mobile phone voice services, following a complaint from French satellite operator Eutelsat.
