Category:2021[Evaluation of childhood-onset systemic lupus erythematosus by the clinical symptoms in the Japanese SLE-JAC Group (J-SLEG)]. The clinical manifestations of SLE in Japanese children are mostly similar to those of adults.

However, the precise characteristics of childhood-onset SLE have not yet been elucidated. In this study, we aimed to evaluate the clinical manifestations of childhood-onset SLE using the Japanese SLE-JAC Group (J-SLEG) criteria. A total of 58 children, including 40 with active disease and 18 in remission, were recruited between July 2013 and December 2014. The J-SLEG criteria were applied to all patients, as well as the J-SELENA-SLEDAI. We compared the results with those of a control group of 42 healthy children. As a result, 8 (13.8%) patients were diagnosed with definite SLE, and 1 (1.7%) patient fulfilled the criteria for probable SLE. There was no difference in the incidence of renal involvement between children and adults. However, cardiac and pulmonary involvements were more frequently observed in children. Although the cut-off points for specific organ involvement were not useful, the number of patients with an abnormal SLEDAI-2k was higher in children than adults. Overall, compared to healthy children, the rates of thrombocytopenia, hypocomplementemia, anemia, lymphadenopathy, pleural effusion, and renal biopsy
