

so far as to what you must do is to use the `ttftp-setup-mini-xx.rar` file that you got to the second step above and using a text only (no installer) installation. You can get that file on line: First off, in case you missed it, I'll remind you that you can get the free version of the program from this website: If you use that version, you should be able to change the serial no. and email address for the program with the auto-updater included in the package you downloaded. It's very easy to do so. You simply load the executable file, choose "customize" in the first window that pops up, and then you have the option to change your info. If you use the installer version, you need to get all of the files that you can see in the link: and then you run the installer. From the first page that appears, choose "customize" and change the info. Well, the step is done. Now you can proceed to the next one. If you're running the free version, run the auto-updater and you will automatically be upgraded to the latest version. If you didn't use the auto-updater before, download it from the link above and do it now. If you're running the installer version, and you didn't use the auto-updater, use the auto-updater now to update the program and once again run the installer to the next step. With the program set up, you can start using it right away. There are lots of other things you can do with it, but I'll show you the coolest feature first. It's called `f=p=0` and it's a joke. If you put `f=p=0` in the `/etc/meson.sh` file (more on that later), the program will turn the power saving mode on automatically. How cool is that? With `f=p=0` enabled, you can set the program to do different things depending on the time of the day. Here are some examples: * switch the power saving mode off at night, * switch the power saving mode on every day at 5:00 a.m., *
