We have a large list of different products/services which require a different amount of information to be filled in to make a complete description of the product/service. In the Ask a Question Wizard, we have the 'overview' for one of the questions which displays the summary as it should. Is there a way to have that overview display a different summary for different questions? Or, should I just make the entire overview page customizable by the community in the FAQ editor? A: I'm not aware of any way to have this but it sounds like a good thing to request. A customisable FAQ is certainly possible, but why wouldn't it be good to be able to have different 'user types' - so you could have a 'more detailed' overview for users with a lot of rep and a 'overview' for users with After a free-spending, spending weekend of parties, photo-ops and a stopover for the requisite dinner with the US president, Xi Jinping had to catch his flight out of the US on Monday. His visit to California and the US was, by any measure, a massive success. He left the US after five days of feasting and picnicking on lobster, and – according to one number cruncher – leaving behind a few US$180bn worth of goods and services, or roughly one-third of US$1.1 trillion in 2017 US GDP. The round of festivities, beginning with a lavish birthday
