This program is made to extract and fill data from an Excel worksheet and fill them into another Excel worksheet. It's also able to extract a whole sheet's data and fill them into another worksheet or Word document. Category:ExcelWe all have a problem or two that we have to overcome on the daily, it's just a question of whether we will go through the daily "problems" and whine or tackle the problem and get the job done. You can't have it both ways if you want to build a successful business. What most people tend to do is allow their feelings and emotions to dictate how they spend their day. If you're upset about a particular problem then you probably won't act like you can't be bothered and still get through the day. If you're not bothered, then you'll give the problem too much thought and procrastinate (you know, because you're not bothered). Stop whining and start tackling. If you don't tackle and get a problem done then the competitor will get the contract. Thanks for the comment A.E. You know how it is, some days, you're so tired, your not in the mood to do it all day. You work hard for a few hours, and then feel exhausted, then need a day off to recoup. However, your right, we have to tackle it, and get it done. Then when we do it, we feel great. There is always a point at which we have to stop. I will try to tackle it right now. Now back to work... ha haOECD pushes for new global architecture rules The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) has long been a defender of the global trade system. That's a role it is now expanding, as the Paris-based institution is proposing new international rules governing the fair pricing of digital services and goods. The proposed changes, which include new guarantees on consumer rights and common standards for the sale of electronic books and digital content, will be put forward at the OECD's Council in Paris later this month, it was revealed at a meeting of the Working Group on the Digital Economy on 12 November. The framework would cover such areas as net neutrality and consumer rights in online commerce and would in essence enable regulators to ensure that the Internet remains a vibrant marketplace that is both fair and open. The OECD wants to make sure that consumers will
