In order to study the accessibility of target molecules and proteins at charged interfaces (e.g., cell membranes), the polymer (polystyrene sulfonate, PSS) is commonly used to represent the cell membrane. Although PSS is an efficient screening tool, the influence of its aggregation on the accessibility of molecules at a solid substrate is unknown. In this study, we report that PSS can promote the aggregation of glycoconjugates at solid surfaces. To understand the effect of PSS on glycan aggregation at solid 1cb139a0ed
