created a new office focused on early voting. “I’m excited about the new office,” Governor Northam said in a news release. “No longer will the public be forced to wait in long lines to cast their ballot. We’re working to make voting easy and efficient for Virginians, as well as giving poll workers more time to help their neighbors have a seamless and successful experience.”

The state has drastically reduced its hours of early voting, which previously was offered from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Advocates for early voting have long criticized the state’s early voting hours, even before Republicans took control of the governor’s mansion. They noted that there are few early voting sites in the Southside and Tidewater and Hampton Roads. One proposed site, outside the Norfolk Naval Base, was ruled off limits because of a permit requirement. The state made news for its 2011 changes to early voting, which extended them until 8 p.m. on Election Day, and again in 2014, when they were extended to 5 p.m. Last year, Republican legislative leaders slammed a bill that would have let Virginians vote by mail with their actual signatures on the mail ballot. The latest changes are more modest than early voting would be in other states, but election lawyers and others have objected to the reduction in hours and increased penalties for voter fraud. “We’re going to take a deeper look at the law
