This initiative creates a compatibility layer that effectively allows any application to switch between open-source and proprietary renderers in a cross-platform manner. Mozilla developers made a great effort to make SwiftShader very efficient for both 2D and 3D applications, where it even keeps most rendering details in the system memory. Comfortably, SwiftShader can be used to accelerate the rendering process using OpenGL ES on Android or Open Source drivers on Linux systems. However, SwiftShader introduces many innovative features not typically found on PC hardware, for instance, it can automatically detect and adjust the CPU-GPU pipeline to make sure the maximum performance is achieved. Hello, Recently the rdesktop needed updating to the newest version of rdesktop which did not have the built-in package for windows 8.1. I had to have someone build the package for me because I do not have the skill or knowledge to make windows packages myself. I have tested this package on my end and it works fine. I found it on google and thought I would share with you in hopes that you would be able to make a vista package to help others. If you want it you can find it on the first post of this site: I hope
