Mechanism of 1-Methyl-7-propylxanthine-induced release of mast cells mediator from rabbit alveolar macrophages: role of cAMP phosphodiesterase. Alveolar macrophages from rabbits treated with 1-Methyl-7-propylxanthine (7-propyl-1,2,4-oxatrazine), a phosphodiesterase inhibitor, were found to contain an elevated level of cyclic adenosine 3',5'-monophosphate, and this increase in cAMP concentration could not be inhibited by the combination of adenosine and 7-propylxanthine. The subsequent addition of 7-propylxanthine to macrophages caused a time- and concentration-dependent release of mediator from the intact cells. The release of mediator was associated with an increase in membrane permeability as measured by the leakage of horseradish peroxidase. 7-Propylxanthine-induced secretory activity was not due to the direct stimulation of mast cells by 7-propylxanthine but was likely a secondary response to the elevated cAMP levels in macrophages. ## FreeCRM

Organise all your important information: Easy to use personal information manager Keep track of emails, contacts, appointments, tasks and much more Create invoices, track your finance, use project management and charting With FreeCRM all the things you need to manage are located in one user friendly interface Track all your contacts (phone, email, address, fax) Create daily agendas and notebooks View and edit pictures Quick report generator In order to prevent unauthorized use, FreeCRM has an option to encrypt all the data you store. You can use Public-Key Crypto algorithms to establish a secure connection between the server and the client. This would mean that only you can decrypt and access your information. This encryption makes FreeCRM truly secure against anyone trying to hack into your data. You can access your data even if your computer is stolen or destroyed. However, if your computer is attacked by a malicious software, there is a good chance your confidential data could be captured. FreeCRM offers you a choice to protect your data by hiding your data in a strong password. This password can be stored inside the application so it can not be stolen by hackers or malicious software. The password will only be unlocked when the user enters her password.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an optical scanning apparatus. More specifically, the invention relates to a scanning optical system for scanning a deflected light beam on a surface of a rotary drum, for example, in an electrophotographic copying apparatus. 2. Description of the Prior Art In an electrophotographic copying apparatus, a photoconductive material is charged uniformly by a charging unit, and the uniformly charged surface is exposed to a light beam to form a latent electrostatic image corresponding to an optical image. The latent electrostatic image is developed into a visible image by a developer such as a toner and thereafter the visible image is transferred to a copy sheet. The visible image transferred to the copy sheet is then fixed by application of heat and pressure in a fixing unit. The copy sheet bearing the fixed visible image thereon is discharged outside the copying apparatus. For formation of the latent image, it is necessary to accurately focus the image onto the surface of the photoconductive material. In this requirement, a scanning optical system for focussing the light beam, which includes a rotary polygon mirror, has been employed. The assignee of the present invention has already developed a single-beam
