Internet Relay Chat ("IRC") IRC Chat Rooms Use your favorite IRC client to join and participate in online IRC chat rooms. IRC is an asynchronous messaging protocol that enables users to communicate with each other through a common server. The Internet is an expansive network of computers spread around the world that can all communicate with each other and share information over the internet. The Internet makes it possible for everyone to be connected and be part of a community of people who are looking for the same information as you. IRC Chat Room A chat room allows many people to participate in a conversation. You can ask questions, make comments, or offer suggestions. A chat room is located in an Internet Relay Chat ("IRC") server, which is a computer that hosts hundreds of chat rooms. You will use a client to communicate with other users in the chat room. IRC is an extremely popular format for online text chats. IRC clients allow people to talk to each other across large distances and across different Internet Service Providers. IRC clients typically connect to an IRC server (usually provided by an ISP) and then connect to another IRC server (or one on the same network) to join a chat room. Chat rooms are typically organized by topic, and users are able to type chat messages or click buttons (like the "Forward" button of a e-mail message) to send messages to other users in the room. Chat rooms can be very popular, and they are often the subject of news reports when there is a particularly large turnout of participants. For more information about IRC: www.internet-irc.org Internet Relay Chat (IRC) Instant messaging (IM) An instant messaging (IM) program provides "push-to-talk" communication, where the user can type a message and the system will send it immediately to one or more other users. To do this, the user types a message, the program formats the message, and sends it immediately to the other person(s). The most common instant messaging system uses a central server to connect the clients. This makes it possible for many people to connect to a central server (usually a Web server) and then connect to one of the other users. Instant messaging can be used to connect to other users using either traditional Internet protocols (HTTP, FTP, and SMTP) or through new, specialized protocols. These protocols take advantage of the strong TCP/IP protocol underlying the Internet. There are numerous IM protocols available for instant messaging. Here are some of the most common: SmarterMail instant messaging is implemented as a plugin to the popular SmarterMail mail and news client. Groupwise instant messaging is part of Groupwise Office. This version is integrated with Microsoft Exchange and supports POP3/SMTP/IMAP4 authentication for security. GAD instant messaging for the internet is a standard on many new browsers. The browser implements this directly by requiring a secure connection. Hipp
