CHICAGO (August 8, 2018)—The City of Chicago's Transportation and Public Works departments have launched a new, real-time online Map and Walking Dashboard that residents, business owners, and visitors can use to see and compare the current status of street and sidewalk conditions across the city. The new maps feature clear, easy-to-use graphics to help identify areas where better walking and safety conditions could be improved. The online maps and dashboard are now available for public review and updates, and are free of charge. Feedback and issues related to the maps can be submitted by emailing mapfeedback@chicagocop.com or calling 311. "It's important for us to understand the walking conditions in the city to help residents, business owners and visitors understand what areas are in the best shape for walking and safety and where improvements are needed," said CPTW Commissioner Pawel Balis, explaining the need for the project and thanking the Chicago community for its participation. "We're working together with the Chicago community to make it easier to navigate our streets and sidewalks." The new maps are generated from a combination of the Department's survey data and citizen input, allowing the public to see the survey response results visually in real time. Input from survey respondents provides details about what public areas have most need for improvement. The maps also incorporate public comments made on the survey, as well as open-source data from the City of Chicago's Civic Cloud, that contain street and sidewalk conditions in order to paint an overall picture of Chicago's walking conditions. "The City of Chicago has one of the most active economies in the United States, and we want to ensure that all residents, especially our seniors and those with disabilities, have the accessibility they need when walking," said CPTW Commissioner Susana Mendoza. "Our walkability needs to be improved as we continue to grow, and we are proud of the work our transportation and public works staff are doing to provide the tools they need to do so." Chicago resident Jodi Schrempf shared her experience with the maps she used to assist her in finding accessible sidewalks while walking in the city. "Before the Chicago Department of Transportation brought this tool to the community, I didn't know much about which sections of the city were most walkable," she said. "I looked at
