"The progression of Gameplay and Motion Capture in recent years has been huge," said FIFA Lead Producer Peter Knol. "With [Jordan's] and [Bale's] awe-inspiring physical reactions, this allows us to tailor gameplay to deliver a more authentic and immersive experience." Below are FAQs answered by Game Director David Rutter and Lead Producer Peter Knol on the enhancements of the gameplay and introduction of "HyperMotion Technology." What is "HyperMotion Technology?" "HyperMotion Technology" is a new physics-based animation system that applies real-time data collected from live players' motions in motion capture suits. It's the most sophisticated physics engine in the history of the series, allowing us to replicate various kinds of player actions and game play we could never have achieved before. The physicality of the animations are closest in the series to real life, and are achieved with data collected from real human motion, such as the player's agility, power, force, trajectory and acceleration. Below are a few examples of how we achieve realistic animations with physical properties such as speed, acceleration, rotation, falling, etc. Here are some stats: Average frame rate of 4,447 frames/sec for the above-mentioned gameplay on FIFA 19 Average frame rate of 4,837 frames/sec for the above-mentioned gameplay on FIFA 20 Average frame rate of 4,809 frames/sec for the above-mentioned gameplay on FIFA 22 What are the benefits of "HyperMotion Technology?" The physics engine incorporates data collected from real human motion and data from the 22 real footballers who played this week's E3 demo, in order to enhance responsiveness, realism and stability. With the "HyperMotion Technology," it is possible to conduct actions such as tackling, diving, sliding, rolling, catching and kicking a lot more precisely than before. The animations are much more realistic than before as well. Is "HyperMotion Technology" exclusive to FIFA 22? "HyperMotion Technology" has been successfully introduced to FIFA 19, and remains a key element in FIFA 20. We're also exploring it for potential use in all FIFA titles, and will share more details about this soon. Is there a timeline for "HyperMotion Technology?" As we mentioned, we're exploring what we can do with "HyperMotion
