A moderator, @Kathy, reported a comment on one of my posts: I don't see any relation between your behaviour and the question. The question is interesting, you are misbehaving. It's your choice to stay or to leave. You can vote to delete the post when you agree. I replied that I didn't see any relation: There is the discussion of C++ vs C#. I don't see any relation. I am sorry to have done anything wrong. I will remove my comment. No, I am saying that your question is not interesting. It is not useful d0c515b9f4

The Alliance released its first book in 2006 titled "The Alliance for Progress: A Memoir of Latin American Economic Recovery." History The Alliance for Progress was conceived by Robert F. Kennedy and is supported by former United States presidents and first ladies Jimmy Carter, Barbara Bush, and Rosalynn Carter; former treasury secretaries William E. Simon and James A. Baker, III; former secretaries of state George P. Shultz and Henry Kissinger; former defense secretaries Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney; former U.S. ambassadors to Latin America Edward S. Mann, Jr. and Thomas Pickering; former U.S. Supreme Court justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Harry A. Blackmun; Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and author Thomas Friedman; and others. In a December 2005 speech to the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS), former US President Jimmy Carter described the Alliance as one of several partnerships between the United States and Latin American countries created and approved by the Bill Clinton administration. Mission The Alliance's mission is to promote the following: United States ties with Latin American countries A more open market economy Democratization Human rights Health and education Democracy Its main principle is that there is an opportunity to renew and promote relations with Latin America. Allying with the region, according to the Alliance, would depend on "a recognition that the future is all about political, economic and societal reform and not just economic growth." Membership Current members Past members Luis Alberto Moreno, President of the Central American Bank for Economic Integration (CABEI) Andrés Manuel López Obrador, President of the National Regeneration
