The museum, housed in a former Bahay Pangin hospital in Mandaluyong City, was forced to cut its appeal for 2017 following the unprecedented crackdown on long-term foreign investors and citizens last year.

ADVERTISEMENT The museum, managed by the Aliw family, will continue its efforts to rebuild and expand for a second year, said

Johnny Aliw, one of its executives. “We try to survive even in times like this,” Aliw said, during an interview at the museum on Sunday. He said the museum’s appeal drive will start anew next year despite the appeal drive having to be scrapped in 2017. The museum is dedicated to former first lady Imelda Marcos and her husband, the late former President Ferdinand Marcos. It charges P14 admission. The museum is currently undergoing a four-year expansion program, said Aliw, adding that the museum will be relaunched as an expansive facility featuring a retail center and expansive hall spaces. “We want to renovate the museum as a memorial in our own way,” he said. He also explained the appeal for 2017 was partly triggered by the need to raise funds to complete the museum’s renovation. The museum’s appeal drive, started in 2013, aims to collect P200 million

What's New In?

A reversal of the field was on full display when Gallup, posing as a conservative, asked Republicans if they would prefer a President “who’s moderate or conservative” rather than a President “who’s liberal.” Obama’s 83% favorable rating in the poll has declined from the high-89% ratings he received in December, May and February. The early March Rasmussen poll showed a more modest 58% favorable rating among Republicans. Gallup reported March 3: President Barack Obama is now viewed favorably by 83% of the public, down from 86% in the previous two surveys conducted in February and March of this year. Less than one-in-three adults now has a favorable impression of the president, down from 37% in the previous measure in late February. The Gallup poll and others are consistent with the Rasmussen poll of early March in showing a sharp decline in approval ratings for Obama. Gallup's chart of its daily tracking of Obama's approval rating during his first year in office shows an unusually high 90% approval rating in late January and early February, as Obama was successfully pushing through an economic stimulus bill with Republican opposition. Obama's overall approval rating dropped steadily to 74% at the end of February, 73% in mid-March and now 74% in early April. Gallup is likely capturing a temporary reversal of opinion by public opinion. For example, Barack Obama's approval rating was in the 90s at the end of 2008, but Gallup's national and regional surveys were all conducted before the collapse of the economy. His approval ratings slipped steadily from the end of 2008 through 2009 until March of 2010, reflecting the impact of the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression. Today's poll is conducted during the slow recovery of the economy and also coincides with the unprecedented public attention the Obama administration is getting for its handling of the Gulf of Mexico oil well disaster. But my gut tell is that, however much we might disagree with the Obama administration's response to the oil rig disaster, is that the public is generally satisfied with the president's handling of the economy and that the oil well incident is not helping their view of Obama. The Gallup poll also shows that Obama's approval ratings are largely stable across the nine national regions Gallup surveyed, with three exceptions. East Coast and West Coast regions, as we'll see below, have very different views of
