As police officers from across Ontario face a renewed test, like never before, to see if they can push the technology they carry with them to the max, some officers are not only retiring early, but they're also hoping to get out of the job. "Looking at the job now, it's a suicide mission," says a veteran Toronto police constable, speaking on the condition of anonymity due to the sensitive nature of the job. He joined the force in 2004, and is now set to retire in just over a year, at age 49. "We're working longer hours, just to make ends meet, and getting older as well." In the last few years, young officers are hitting the front lines with the big, heavy equipment — like the surveillance system that is being phased out by a new police vehicle fleet. Older officers are now back at the crux of the technology — hitting the streets with less technological help, and using the Toronto police's Map Computer service, and their social-media networks to report and solve crimes. "It's a very high-stress job," says Toronto police spokesperson Mark Pugash, noting the pressures police officers face, as they're "charged with upholding the law and keeping the public safe." In 2006, the Toronto police reported they employed more than 6,500 constables. But, in recent years, it has become harder for the force to hire new recruits and keep them. On Tuesday, Chief of Staff Chris Adams offered the following statement when asked why Toronto's police force is recruiting more constables, but declining officers. "We are a growing, though aging, organization. And during tough financial times, we simply cannot justify taking our best and brightest into a job with little reward and low pay. So we have a responsibility to the city to ensure our service remains world-class and our community safe." "We are a growing, though aging, organization." In response to a Star reporter's question about the need to go back to recruiting constables, Adams responded: "At this time, we have plenty of more experienced officers. But we also want to be able to attract and retain some of the most talented and valued officers of all time." Currently, there are 15,000 active sworn Toronto police officers.

We need to know more. We need to hear from the people. We need to hear from the students who've been on the receiving end of the policies of the administration. We need to hear from the parents of the children who can't afford the school lunches or the summer camp. We need to hear from the kids who need to be encouraged and supported and mentored. I'm sorry if the previous school didn't emphasize this, but this school did. The boys at my school are exemplary in every way. The administration seems to think the answer is not to examine it's methods, but to blindly repeat the same old things with the same old people. It's like the school is afraid to look at itself. My entire life is about making sure people understand and deal with the world correctly. Why are people in this position as adults? What happened to them? How can we help them? Sometimes it feels like I'm a parent trying to talk to an adult who is afraid to have an adult conversation, but none of the adults seem to understand the value of that kind of conversation.Pages Saturday, November 13, 2010 I'm having a blast reading this book, and getting sucked into these characters' lives. I may never even get to finish the book. It's just so compelling, and I'm enjoying it so much. I think I'm the type of reader that
