The effect of interleukin-1 and tumor necrosis factor on the contractile function of the endothelial cells in vitro. Interleukin-1 (IL-1) and tumor necrosis factor (TNF) are two cytokines present in the inflammatory fluid involved in periodontal disease. Since these cytokines stimulate the generation of prostanoids and the expression of vascular cell adhesion molecule-1 (VCAM-1) on endothelial cells, we investigated the effect of IL-1 and TNF on the contractile properties of the endothelial cells. IL-1 and TNF stimulation caused a dose-dependent relaxation of rings of endothelial cells from bovine retinal arteries. A similar relaxation was observed in the presence of indomethacin and when Ca²⁺ stores were depleted. Furthermore, a combination of bradykinin and IL-1 caused a comparable relaxation, which was inhibited by indomethacin. The endothelial cell relaxation was also blocked by the protein synthesis inhibitor cycloheximide and by actinomycin D. In conclusion, IL-1 and TNF exert a vasodilator effect on endothelial cells via an indomethacin-sensitive prostaglandin-independent pathway. This effect may be important in the inflammatory process and in the development of vasospasm. New York City made history today when it became the first major city to ban the sale and possession of all flavored e-cigarettes. The law, the first major citywide ban on vaping, has two key parts: The prohibition on the sale of e-cigarettes to people under the 1cdb36666d

Antimalarial assays against Plasmodium falciparum in vitro showed that the ethanol extract from the culture of X-114121 mutants contained a new type of compound with an unusual structural feature, which was chemically identified as (2R,3R)-2,3-dihydroxy-7,8,9,10-tetramethoxybibenzanthrone (1), a new dibenzothiophene ketone derivative.Superconductivity at magnetic order Since superconductivity can occur in a strongly correlated material, it is a natural question to ask if there is any possible connection between magnetic order and superconductivity. This is not as straightforward as one might think: while it is common to see that superconductivity occurs in a ferromagnet or antiferromagnet, there is a natural difference between the two. In antiferromagnets, there is no net magnetization. However, in ferromagnets, the electrons are able to be polarized. If the polarization is strong enough, it becomes a force field (Curie) like, which is more favorable to coexist with superconductivity. To get around this problem, a model was developed where magnetic order is replaced with a potential of mean force, allowing the electrons to be polarized by the potential and the condensate to be replaced with a condensate of electrons polarized in the same direction (see figure below). This allows both ferromagnetism and antiferromagnetism to be able to coexist with superconductivity, which is a consequence of the potential acting only in regions of positive ion. Since the original paper, two other papers have been published further elaborating on this model. The first paper looked at the doping of the compound, with even-odd parity switching allowing the charge density waves order to be replaced with a condensate of electrons
