Bernie Sanders (I-VT) is still comparing the United States under President Donald Trump to apartheid-era South Africa. Sanders, a former Democrat in the U.S. Senate, found himself competing against Hillary Clinton for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2016 and the two sparred over the merits of the former secretary of state’s 2002 Senate vote on the Iraq War resolution. Last week, Sanders repeated the comments he made the day Clinton claimed she voted for the Iraq War resolution as a senator. “I voted against that war,” Sanders said. “I’m proud of that vote. And anybody in this country who votes for that war without having been a major war opponent when we had a Democratic Congress, I think you have got to look in the mirror. I would hope that every Democrat does that.” The Washington Post reports: The United States is looking a lot like it did in South Africa during the apartheid era under the eyes of the world, with police forces cracking down on black protesters while not allowing them freedom of movement,” Sanders said. “People get frustrated. And I think the frustration is not only directed at Donald Trump, but at the president’s inability and unwillingness to deal with his legacy and his legacy of racism and his legacy of sexism.” In a second segment Monday, Sanders cited the new South African president, Cyril Ramaphosa. “Now I cannot tell you what the future holds in South Africa, and in my view they have a lot to be worried about,” he said. “But I will tell you as somebody who is a student of history, a historian, and you have got a president who has inherited a very serious situation.” “In the case of Cyril Ramaphosa, who became the new president of South Africa, nobody would have predicted a few months ago that he would become the new president of South Africa,” Sanders said. “These are real things.” Follow Penny Starr on Twitter o r s o f 1 0 6 7 5 2 0 9 . 1cdb36666d

Another class is named Session which contains a connection object to communicate to the remote server. The connection object contains the string to be sent to the remote server and the objectOutputStream instance is to be used for that. Connection to server will have some time to connect to server and send message. So, I am thinking of using a Timer, which will check the objectOutputStream every 100 milliseconds. If it fails to deliver the message to remote server, then it will inform user. I am not sure how I can add a timer to this objectOutputStream. Please do help. I have found two things on Stackoverflow, one being using Android Timer and the other using timerThread. The first thing suggested using timer for every 100ms, which may consume
